Laws Don't Solve Problems-People Do

Washington, D.C. — "If we are serious about solving the problems of alcohol in our society, we must turn the forces of our society loose against the glamourization of the drinking act," An authority on alcoholism stated today.

Dr. Winston H. Beaven, director of the Washington Institute of Scientific Studies for Prevention of Alcoholism told students at the ninth annual session that neither laws, education, rehabilitation, nor science have dented the increase of alcoholism in the United States.

"We tried Prohibition which took alcohol from man," he told students attending a two-week institute at American University. "We would now take the man from alcohol, but we shall not solve the problem of alcohol in society in this fashion."

With all that has been done to treat the alcoholic, he said, as of 1963 not one percent of all the alcoholics in the United States has been helped by any treatment whatsoever. We have not begun to touch the fringes of the problem," he stated.

Dr. Beaven said the cost to industry in America is estimated at ten billion dollars every year. He said that the daily accidents is two times greater among alcoholic than non alcoholic employees both on and off the job.

Pointing out that laws never solve problems, but people do, Dr. Beaven recommended a legal age limit code for drinking drivers, promotion of mentl a health education in school, and increase in the number of teachings of the churches, a advertising an deglamourization of the entire drinking act in our society.

The Washington Institute sponsored by the National Committee for th ePrevention of Alcoholism. The National Committee conducts two institutes on alcoholism each summer in the United Sates one on the eWest coast, and the Washington Institute on the East Coast.

Wooldridge Letter Recalls W W One

Veterans of World War I or any other war, for that matter, may enjoy reading this "Doughboy's" letter home, dated Dec. 2, 1918. George Wiley Wooldridge wrote it to his mother, Mrs. Eula Wooldridge. It has been preserved, along with others including some from Travis Wooldridge to Miss Estelle Wooldridge, in a manila envelope bearing postage long since out-of-date, plus that ever-present mark of war — a censor's stamp and initials.

"Dec. 2, 1918. Dar Mother: I will drop you a few lines tonight. I am getting long fine and would like very much to see you all, but I think I will be there soon. I haven't written you before that I got wounded in my leg about a month ago. It is 'most well now, and I will be one of the first to get home. I am having a fine time at the hospital. We have lots of fun and plenty to eat."

"I have a boy friend from Virginia, and we have some times together. I think we will be back inside of sixty days. No need to worry about me because I am writing that I am wounded for I have been hurt worse than this at home, and another thing, I am in a good house and a good bed to sleep in, and I am not out in the cold weather."

"A bunch of boys just got over here (France). They left the states after the Armistice was signed. They said there were some times over there."

Pastor Says—

If our Bible reading is to have any meaning for us we must follow some sort of plan, not just read wherever the Bible may fall open. The same plan will not work for everyone. It must be adapted to our needs. Each must develop the plan which best suits his own needs.

As a general guide we suggested last week that we begin with a gospel, followed by Acts and Romans. Next we might want to trace the history of Israel through reading Genesis, Exodus Joshua, Judges, I and II, Samuel and I and II Kings. As we read these books we discover the conviction of these writers that God was acting in history on behalf of Israel. He was a God of salvation, redeeming his people because of his great love for them. This action is climaxed in the person and work of Jesus Christ, as it is recorded in the New Testament.

As we continue to explore the books of this great library we will want to see how the epistles of the New Testament work out the many implications of the Gospel for the average Christian: we will want to experience the fire of the Old Testament prophets as they thundered out the Word of God, proclaiming God's divine wrath at one moment and his mercy the next; we will ponder the great questions of the Wisdom writers, and rejoice in the heavenly chorus of Revelation in exclaiming, "Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power, and might, be unto our God forever and ever. Amen."

Space prohibits a more complete plan of Bible reading, but a word about Daniel and Revelation. Two attitudes prevail about these books. The first seeks to use these books as a blueprint for predicting events of history today. The other views the books as being too difficult to attempt understanding. If we see these books as being written in symbolic language to men and women under severe persecution for their belief in the living God reassuring them of the ultimate triumph of God over the forces of evil, then we shall not go far wrong in our interpretation and shall find added significance in their message.

As we continue to read the Bible may we come to know more perfectly the God, who, in Christ, is redeeming you and me to Himself.

Thomas A. Waddill, Pastor

Why Jesus Came

Lesson for October 11, 1964

When we ask the question Why? we can mean either one of two things by it. One "Why?" looks backward, the other forward. Imagine a straight line with an arrow at each end, one pointing right, the other left. Let the straight line represent any event, let us say your grandfather's moving to Alaska. Now if I ask, "Why did your grandfather move to Alaska?" I can mean by that one of two things. I can mean what was the cause. What were the causes, or What was the purpose, What were the purposes? In this week's study we ask the second question. For what purpose did Jesus come?

To Save Sinners

The first answer, which includes most others, is that Jesus came "to save sinners." Let's not skip over that as if we knew what it meant already. It suggests a great deal, and points up some of the differences between Christian and other religions. Some religions deny that man, any man, is a sinner. Communism, which is a kind of religion in reverse, gives up the notions of "right" and "wrong" for the simpler ideas of "correct" and "incorrect." Even if the words "good" and "bad" are used, they do not refer to God at all, for the communist recognizes no God. One may offend man but not God, they say. There are people who believe unpleasantly, but none who sin. For sin is a religious word, a word with God in the background.

To Be a Bridge

Another reason for which Jesus came and comes every day—into this world, is to be a "Mediator." There is one mediator between God and men, Paul says — himself man, Christ Jesus. The gulf between man and God seems too deep and too wide to be spanned. Man looked across and could see nothing but darkness and mystery. The Hebrews themselves, who knew much that is true about God, when they built a temple, left one room in it without a window and without even a place to set a lamp. This dark room was God's room, its darkness symbolizing man's ignorance of God. It was written in the Old Testament that God said, "No man shall see my face and live." The Apostle John in the New Testament speaks of God as one whom "no man has seen at any time;" and in this same letter to Timothy God is one whom "no man has seen nor can see." (I. Timotny 6:16) How terribly discouraging this is! Unless somehow this gulf of darkness is crossed, we are doomed to be forever separated from God.

To Give Himself

Jesus, we say, revealed God. He did this in words, in his teachings. By the way he talked about God, yes and the way he talked to God. Jesus opens for all who will look, windows into the character and purposes of God. But the unique and amazing thing about Jesus is that he not only gave us information — the prophets had done that; he gave himself. he was not merely a wise man who told us much about God we did not already know. He offered himself as a sacrifice, for our sakes. He is the Bridge; one who is not only a friend of man and friend of God, but one who shares our sorrows and even takes on himself the burdens and shame of our sins. He gave us wisdom, his time, his courage, his faith, his love; and in giving these things he was giving himself. Christ, in short, belongs to us.

ABANDONED INFANT

Dillon, S. C. — An abandoned three-day-old infant was found in a car at a service station. Hospital spokesmen said the baby was in good condition. Left with the warmly clad baby boy, was a 12-pound bag of diapers and a mixed formula that was still warm.
